

The Mail Ego

By Terrence O'Flaherty

"Nudity seems to be a big question in Hollywood and fascinating everywhere else. I have told my teenage daughter that really distinguished actresses would never appear in the nude. Am I wrong?"

(there any hope for improvement?")

Not if St. John Ervine's definition of motion pictures is true: "Stories written by the half-educated for the half-witted."

Most distinguished actresses don't need to resort to nudity. That's the reason they're distinguished. It takes more skill to suggest nudity than to take all your clothes off. Also, by the time they're "distinguished," they're a little too old, I'm afraid, for such things. Scrawny, younger actresses like Vanessa Redgrave, who partially disrobed in "Blow-Up" should keep their clothes on at ALL times.

"Last week I saw Zsa Zsa Gabor on NBC. What has she done before this?"

Just about everything.

"First Will Rogers and Helen Gahagan Douglas, then George Murphy and Ronald Reagan. And now Shirley Temple! This trend to mix politicians and actors may be new but when will it end?"

There's really nothing new about it. Politicians have always been actors. Now, the vice is versa. It will end up when Congress opens every session by facing Hollywood and singing a chorus of "Another Opening, Another Show!"

"Star Trek" is the only television show among my favorites that hasn't been cancelled this season and William Shatner is the best actor in it. What has he done before this?"

Like most of television's top performers he started in a small theatrical group—in this case, the little theater at Canada's McGill University. He appeared in Shakespearean productions at Stratford, Ontario with stars like Sir Alec Guinness and James Mason and made his Broadway debut in "Tamburlaine" followed by the starring role in "The World of Suzie Wong." His movies are "The Brothers Karamazov" and "Judgment at Nuremberg." His most recent TV series was "For the People" based on cases of the New York district attorney's office.

"Each year there are always a few great movies but most of them are disappointing or downright junk."

"What is June Lockhart's maiden name?"

Lockhart. She started in films when she was young and still living with her parents who were both theater people. Her father was Gene Lockhart, the fine old Canadian character actor who died in 1958 but is still remembered for his role as the one who sold out Pepe Le Moke in the movie "Algiers" with Charles Boyer and Hedy Lamarr.

"Where can I write to the cast of 'Batman'?"

Care of 20th Century-Fox, Box 900, Beverly Hills, California. The same address goes for these other TV shows: "Daniel Boone," "Felon Squad," "Lost in Space," "Peyton Place," "Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea," "Journey to the Center of the Earth," plus the new series "Custer" and "Judd."
